Our Name

Sugar & Leather is not a contradiction - it is a philosophy.

Sugar is creativity, innovation, warmth and joy.

Leather is strength - not rigid like steel, but flexible, durable and earned.

Together they describe every leader, every coach and every company we work with:
human at the core, unbreakable under pressure.

Our Mission

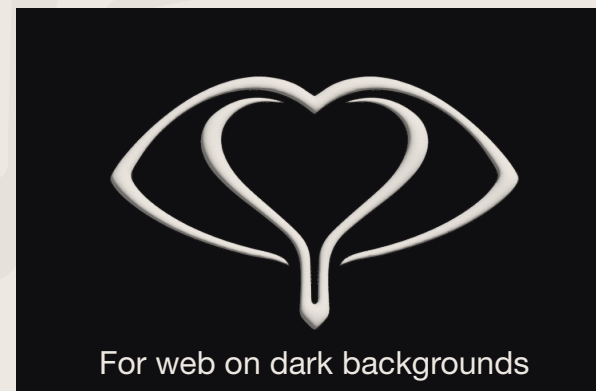

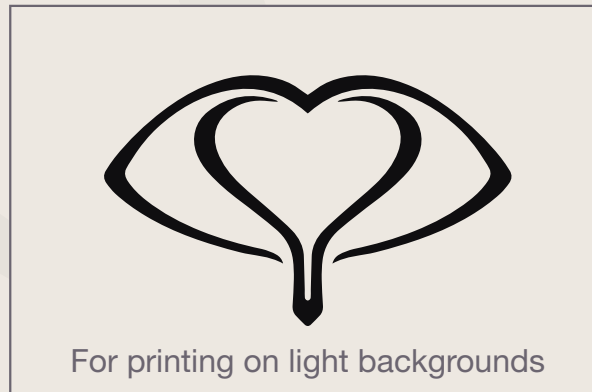

To humanize artificial intelligence by staying deeply human ourselves - delivering world-class executive coaching and strategic AI leadership to the people and organizations brave enough to lead through change.

Our Logo

Our logo comes in two colors - Obsidian (#0E0C0F) and Cream (#EDE8E1).

The dark version is for use on light backgrounds and light images.

The light version is for use on dark backgrounds and dark images.

Logo - Color use on images

When placing the logo on images, always be aware of the general space and color of the part of the image that the logo will sit on.

The logo needs to have clear space to breathe, be visibly legible and not clash when placed on the photography underneath it.

✓ DO

CORRECT USAGE:

V1 - When using an image that has a dark background, use the white logo for clarity.

V2 - When using an image that has a light background, use the dark logo for clarity.

INCORRECT USAGE:

V3 - The logo is situated too close to the person in the image.

V4 - Do not use a logo color that is too similar to the image color, it will lose legibility.

V1 - White on dark imagery

✗ DON'T

V3 - Logo too close to image content

V2 - Dark on light imagery

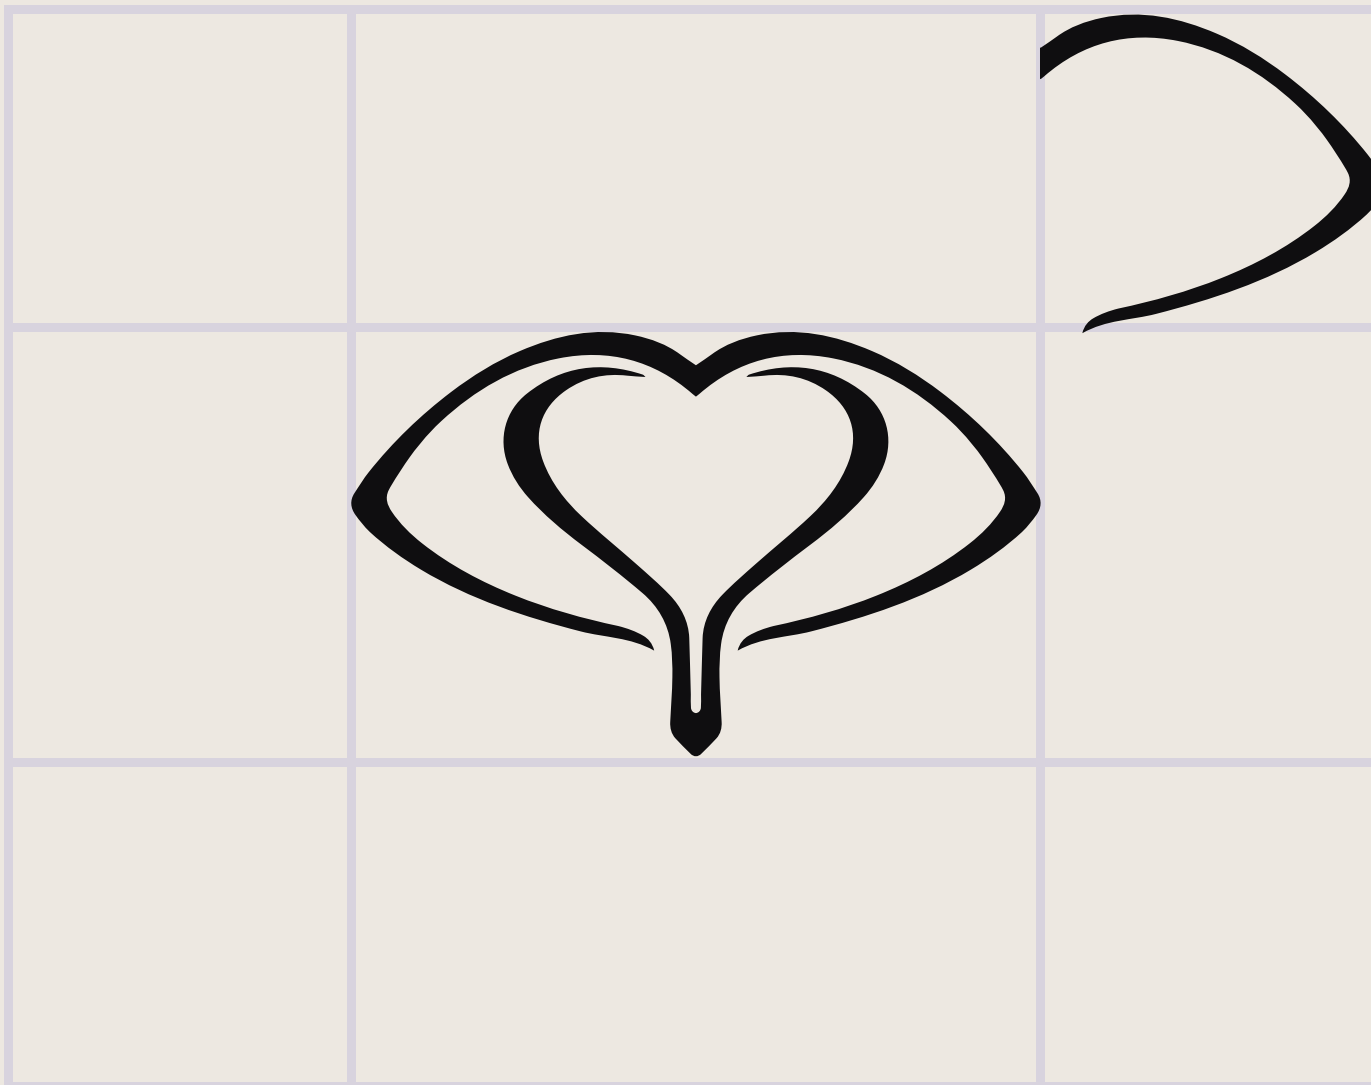

V4 - Logo color too similar to background

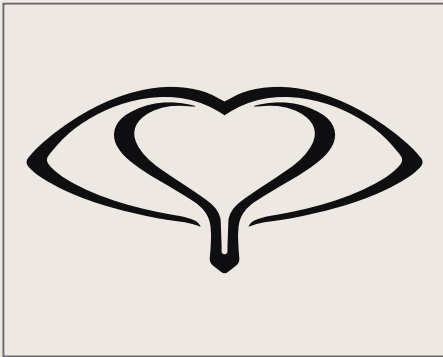

Logo - Clear space guide

An exclusion space exists around the Sugar&Leather logo, in order to give it some breathing space and never be crowded or interfered with by other graphic elements.

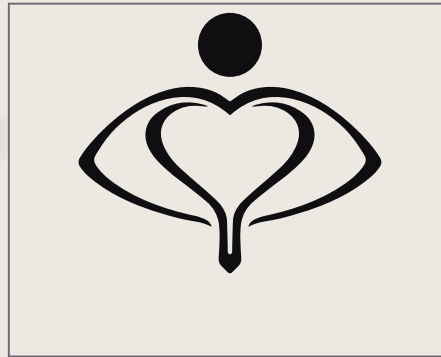

The logo clear space can be measured by using the height and width of 1/2 x its size.

Why Obsidian and Cream...

Obsidian

This isn't simply "black." True black (#000000) is harsh and flat - it reads as void. Obsidian is black with a barely perceptible purple undertone, which does something psychologically interesting: it feels deep rather than empty. Purple is historically the color of wisdom, authority and transformation. By embedding it invisibly into the darkest color in the system, Obsidian carries authority without announcing it. It also connects subliminally to the leather aesthetic - the inside of a quality leather jacket at night.

Neurologically, dark backgrounds with light text reduce eye strain for extended reading and signal premium quality. Studies in consumer psychology consistently show that dark packaging and dark interfaces are associated with higher perceived value and exclusivity. Think Chanel, Rolex, Rolls-Royce. Every luxury brand defaults to darkness because darkness signals that they don't need to shout.

And not Black and White?

Cream

Pure white (#FFFFFF) is clinical. It belongs in hospitals and tech startups that want to look sterile and efficient. Cream is white with warmth - specifically the warmth of aged paper, of handwritten letters, of the inside of that leather jacket collar where "Built. Not given." is stitched. It is white that has lived a little.

Perceptually, cream on Obsidian is softer than white on black, which reduces contrast stress while maintaining full legibility. It also sits in the same color temperature as candlelight and natural morning light - both of which are associated with trust, comfort, and intimacy. This is important for a coaching brand: people need to feel safe enough to be coached, not interrogated by bright light.

Headline

Low-key, dramatic. Dark backgrounds. One strong light source. Chiaroscuro - the subject emerges from shadow.

Subjects

Real leaders. Diversity of age, gender, and background. No stock-photo smiles. Stillness and quiet confidence.

Color

Desaturated. Near-monochrome with dark base. Occasional warm leather brown as accent. No bright or saturated palettes.

Composition

Mood

"Built. Not given." Earned. Strong. Reflective. Leather jacket energy - toughness worn lightly.
